Before the polygraph examination began, the examinee was informed of the examination procedure. The examinee was also advised that the examination could be conducted only with his or her voluntary consent. After being informed of the applicable rights and conditions, the examinee provided written consent to undergo the examination.

An interview was conducted with the examinee to obtain additional biographical information, clarify health-related information, and collect other general background details.

During the subsequent pre-test interview, the test questions were discussed in detail until the examinee fully understood their meaning. The examinee was instructed to answer each question clearly with "yes" or "no." Where a clear response was difficult, the wording of the question was adjusted accordingly.

The examinee was informed that no question would be asked without prior review. All questions were repeated at least three times in different sequences. The Control Question Technique and search-test procedures were used during the examination.
